Dear DCCC Hiring Team,

Enough is enough. I've been making political media for over 15 years, and we need to do something about this. We need to work together to do it. 2026 is a five-alarm fire, it's go time, and I want to be part of the team fighting it.

My core is video: editing, producing, post-production. I started on the 2008 Obama presidential campaign and spent nearly a decade at Signal Group in DC managing government and public affairs video across federal agency contracts. I've produced political ads and advocacy content at Chatham Light Media, delivered broadcast spots and rapid-cycle digital cutdowns for campaigns and issue organizations, and built full post-production pipelines from scratch as an independent producer. I know how this work moves. Overnight edits, legal rounds, stakeholder review, five social cuts from a 60-second spot by morning.

But I also bring something else. I've been deep in production automation and AI tooling. Building workflow systems, scripting pipelines, integrating APIs, using AI-assisted tools for concepting, asset generation, and rapid content production. I write code. I build systems that make creative teams faster. In a cycle where you need to hit from every angle with limited time and resources, that matters.

I don't see a dedicated video or creative production role posted right now, and honestly, that's fine. If there's a place where my skills are useful, whether it's editing, production, digital, or automation, get me in. I'll find my way to where I can do the most good.

Most cycles, I don't even start thinking about campaign work until later in the year. But this is serious, and if we don't show up now with everything we've got, we could lose everything.

I'm based in Michigan, fully remote-capable, and available immediately. Staff, contract, or cycle-based.

I'm taking this very seriously. Put me to work.
